Createspace, United States, 2014. Paperback. Book Condition: New. 229 x 152 mm. Language: English . Brand New Book ***** Print on Demand *****.Defining moments from the life of Joe Hemphill, who has lived with cerebral palsy for seventy years and who rides around town in a power wheelchair using the bike lanes. Joe writes about getting older and needing more help, while staying independent. He also looks back at where he has been and how he got to where he is today. This is a collection of Joe s stories, articles, essays, excerpts from unpublished novels, and letters to the editor of his local newspaper. This book includes recent thoughts and reflections about his current life and dealing with the idea of turning seventy years of age and what the future may hold. Some of these articles and short stories were written as far back as forty-five years ago. Joe includes them along with more current articles and stories to show how he has grown as a person, over the years, as well as how he has grown as a writer. There are journal entries from the year 2013, which deal with getting older, past relationships, and people who are no longer in his life. He talks about a traumatic hospital stay and adjusting to losing some of his independence for the sake of being safer and more secure living on his own and staying out of institutions. Many of the pieces have been published in local newspapers as articles and letters to the editor. Joe realizes that possibly hundreds of thousands of people in the extended circulation areas where he has lived, plus many more online, have read his articles and letters over the years. As you read this book, you will find a man who has cerebral palsy...
